The Indians into Nursing: Career Advancement and Transition Scholars (INCATS) program is a five-year project to increase the number of BSN and advanced practice Native American nurses who will practice in tribal facilities, and build new tribal-academic-practice collaborations that expand the Native American nursing workforce prepared to improve care of native populations. Drs. Michelle Kahn-John and Timian Godfrey, co-PIs of the project, will describe the importance of increasing an Indigenous presence in the nursing profession and the ultimate impact on existing health disparities. Further, INCAT scholars will join and share their journey towards creating health equity for Native communities.
